3	Players receive constant feedback as they play; they can then use that feedback to immediately make adjustments, alter their actions, and find out if these are successful.
4	Gamers certainly make errors (incorrect predictions) on the way to mastery, but the most compelling games give feedback and unlimited chances to try again without pressure or the stress of boredom or hopeless frustration.
5	When their choice or prediction is wrong, they know they will always have another chance.
6	Solo players aren't receiving the negative message that they are alone in their confusion or experiencing the boredom of waiting for a class full of others playing the same game to catch up to their level before proceeding.
/	Without those stressors, they remain comfortable trying other strategies or building skills needed for the designated task.

1	Often, people find it engaging to ask a provocative question at the beginning of a lesson before any information about a phenomenon is known.
	prienomenon is known.
2	However, having students spend time dwelling on something that they lack sufficient background knowledge to think about is not a very efficient use of time.
3	It would be far wiser to hold off on that particularly compelling question so that, when posed, it is compelling not just because it is provocative but because the learner actually sees what makes it interesting.
4	That requires knowledge to see and having that knowledge already in place, the learners can then skillfully engage with it and attention can be more meaningfully captured.

1	There are children who want to excel others and who manifest a suspicious intensity in their struggle to surpass.
2	Frequently there is a note of exaggerated ambition in such a striving which is easily overlooked because we are accustomed to regard ambition as a virtue and to stimulate the child to further effort.
3	This is usually a mistake because the development of a child suffers from too much ambition.
4	A swollen ambition produces a state of tension which the child can bear for a while, but inevitably there will be signs that the tension is growing too great.
5	The child may spend too much time at home with his books and his other activities will suffer.
6	Such children frequently avoid other problems solely on account of their eagerness to be ahead in school.
7	We cannot be completely satisfied with such a development since a child cannot thrive mentally and physically under such circumstances.

1	Young children are not ready to play games with rules. During their early years, they are unable to understand or abide by rules.
2	For instance, watching a group of preschoolers playing musical chairs demonstrates their frustration with set rules.
3	Each time a chair is removed and a child is eliminated, the child cries.
	At the end of the game, many children are upset and only one child is happy - the winner.

6	Musical chairs could become more appropriate by starting with one less chair than the number of children.
7	When the music stops, each child tries to sit on a chair, and when the music begins again, no additional chair is removed,
	so that no one is eliminated.
8	Now the game of movement and listening is fun, and the children joyfully participate in the activity.
